

FORM FOUR CLUSTER KCSE MODEL2

ENGLISH PAPER 2 QUESTIONS

1.COMPREHENSION (20 Marks)

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

1. All the interested parties in the education sector are impressed by the Kenya National Examination Council's measure to ensure this year's National Examination are free of cheating. It is for this reason that 276,224 Kenya Certificate of Secondary Education (KCSE) candidates have 4,834 examination centres manned by 4,886 supervisors who are assisted by 13,796 invigilators. All these are qualified teachers who have been recruited mainly for integrity.

2. The centres are manned by 4,886 armed police officers who are ready for action should there be trouble. And as if this is not enough, there are 686 senior officers manning areas at stations where examination papers are kept.

Before they get into the examination rooms, the candidates are thoroughly searched. Bags containing question papers are opened by the supervisor in the presence of all the candidates. The papers are opened by the supervisor in the presence of all candidates. The papers are given to the individual invigilators per examination room candidature.

Any remaining question papers are sealed and kept in full view of the candidates during the particular papers entire duration. At the time of sitting for papers, candidates are under hawk-eyed invigilators. And at the end of the paper answer booklets are sealed as all candidates, invigilators and the head teacher witness. All these measures are commendable.

The KNEC deserves a pat on the back also due to the fast reaction Kenyans receive from whenever the media report leakages, which in any case, turn out to be hoaxes. In fact, all doubting Thomases are beginning to have faith in KNEC.

However, all these money - guzzling measures would be unnecessary if Kenyan students have been brought up in a morally upright environment.

Examination cheating shows how morally deprived our society has become. It is a sign that parents and teachers have failed in their duty of moulding the youngsters.

Kenyans must stop and think why the current generation believes in short cuts. As Kenyans, we should find out if our education system is catering for students' moral and ethical needs. Whenever things go wrong in education, interested parties are quick to point accusing fingers. Teachers blame parents and the society and parents blame teachers.

It is about time this dangerous buck-passing game stopped to save the youth who are the foundation of the country's future.

The responsibility of instilling moral and ethics rest on education institutions. Schools play a crucial role as far as the transmission of values is concerned as once children start going to school, they spend more time with teachers than with any other person.

This is why what teachers say is gospel to them and not even parents can make them think otherwise. A teacher can make a great contribution to the fostering of sound moral and religious values in children by taking interests in their behavior.

"What brings Owuor here at this hour- it can't be for love of weeding. He has had something on his mind for a long time and has been as jumpy as an ant with its tail in hot embers. Speak up young man."

Owuor looked at his grandmother in confusion. Naturally he thought that his secrete was well kept. The confusion became respectful admiration. He should have known that nothing could escape this astute woman. "Grandmother, you know that I have worked closely with the priest and I feel that I would like to enter the priesthood. I want to be a priest." His grandmother was nothing if not surprising, so he should not have been flabbergasted by her reaction but he was.

" I wonder when you would get the courage to come out with it. You would not be my grandson if you were a coward. You have concluded quite wrongly that I will stand in your way. It is true that I have had hopes that you might one day sit in the chiefs stool that your father and your grandfather once occupied; but things have changed and people are turning to different things. I had also hoped that you would marry and provide many sons to ensure the continuity of the house of Owuor Kembo; but no I will not stand in your way. However, from now hence fourth you shall fully take your grandfather's name so that as long as you live his name shall be heard among the people. You will not be Owuor Sino, but Owuor Kembo. 4. POEM (20 Marks)

Read the following poem and answer the questions that follow.

4. Justified murder

In my murderous rage
I've committed a crime
And should turn myself in But when I look at you
Lifeless on the cold concrete
I feel not an iota of remorse in me
I proudly, unapologetically hold
The weapon, the tool of my crime
In both hands as I sit on my hunches
And stare endlessly at you
But I feel not an iota of remorse in me
Not you but the nuisance you've been
I count the many times I've prayed
That you would be but a positive guest
At my humble lodgings in vain
So I feel not an iota of remorse in me.
But you did lead to your own demise
Through the many holes you made
Through my wallet and vestments
For just some comfort for you and kin
Thus I feel not an iota of remorse in me.
So when I heard you rush around this house

So much disturbing my peaceful slumber
Like an inspector in a factory
I got into a rage and sought to go to war
With your intruding, careless marauding
Truly I feel not an iota of remorse in me.
As I seek to send your carcass to the next world
I feel truly justified to see to your demise
So to gain back my own peace
That I lost when you barged into my world
And made mine your own to tatter as you wish
For this I feel not an iota of remorse in me.
I will never feel an iota of guilt in me
For the injustices I meted on your life
For I was paying with a tooth
And would do it again on your life
For I was partying with a tooth
And would do it again on your ilk
For the marks of your teeth on many of mine
And feel no remorse
For you are just but a destructibe rat!
For you I feel not an iota of remorse in me!
